

Hellish Board Game Instructions

Hellish is a two player board game where one player must choose the best monsters to fight for them through hell, while their opponent must defend hell with a predetermined lineup of monsters.

What you'll need:

Hellish monster Cards

A 6 sided die

Set Up:

First decide who will be defending hell and who will be fighting through the line up, and become familiar with the cards.

Battle through Hells Defenses:

The player fighting through hells defenses then chooses which monster they want to use against each of Hells defending monsters. Using the monsters abilities both players battle, keeping track of their own health along the way.

Both players roll a 6 sided die, the higher number goes first. Then they play through each battle, the person defending hell trying to defeat the player who is battling through it. A battle is won when the opposing monsters health hits 0. If the player battling through hell is the one defeated, it is game over and the person defending hell wins.

The Final Boss

Once the player fighting through hell has defeated all three monsters consecutively, they must challenge the final boss, the Lord and Hell. For this battle they may use two of the three monsters they got at the beginning of the game to work together against the final boss.

The player fighting through hell gets to roll a 6 sided die for each monster, while the player playing the Lord of Hell uses one to determine the play order of the 3 monsters.

If the player fighting through hell can defeat the Lord of Hell, they are the winner. Otherwise they have lost and the player defending hell has won.
